

Dear Students:

As the National Honorary Spokesperson for Veterans Day, I invite boys and girls of all ages to join me in honoring America's veterans. Not just the men and women who fought in wars but all who have served in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Coast Guard and Marines.

Veterans are a part of your community. They are people like your neighbors, your grandparents, your brother, your sister, or even your mother and father. The millions of Americans who sacrificed their lives to serve our country.

Veterans served to protect the one thing that you and I enjoy everyday, our "Freedom." Freedom includes your choice of music, clothing, saying what you want to say, and even going to school. Presently, service men and women stand ready to protect our freedoms in the war on terrorism. That's why, I believe, it's time for us as young Americans to say "Thank you."

Please join me and thousands of students across the country this November 11th by making a difference in your community. Take time to get to know one of the 25 million living veterans who might just live near you.

Take a moment this Veterans Day to show your appreciation by thanking a veteran for his service. It's not just a day off from school - it's a day to honor America's true heroes.

Sincerely yours,
